Description of the Visa Options

USEH will provide assistance in securing placements as well as visa process.

Working Holiday Visa

This program allows you to fund your vacation with temporary work in Canada. The type of work permit you get for Working Holiday is an open work permit. An open work permit lets you work at most jobs in Canada. However, there are some jobs where you'll have to get a medical exam first. This category is for you if your country is listed on page 3 as YES for the program and if;

- You don't have a job offer yet
- You want to work for more than one employer in Canada
- You want to work in more than one location
- You'd like to earn some money so that you can travel

Young Professionals

This program allows you to gain Canadian professional work experience to better compete in a global economy. The type of work permit you get in the Young Professionals category is an employer-specific work permit. Under this category, work must be paid by employer, self employment is not allowed. This category is for you if:

- You have a job offer in Canada that contributes to your professional development
- You'll work for the same employer in the same location during your stay in Canada

Your employer must meet all labor laws in the province or territory you plan to work including meeting minimum wage requirements. The job you are offered in Canada must be classified as a National Occupational Classification (NOC) Code Skill Type Level 0, A or B to be considered as contributing to your "professional development." A NOC C job might be accepted if you can submit a post-secondary diploma, certificate or degree, with your work permit application. Your diploma, certificate or degree must be translated to English or French.

International Co-op

This program is to get valuable overseas work experience in Canada related to your field of study. The type of work permit you get in the International Co-op (Internship) category is an employer-specific work permit. The internship you are offered in Canada must be directly linked to your field of studies. Wages must follow the labor laws in the province or territory you will be working in. The labor code of the province or territory will determine if an internship needs to be paid or not.

This category is for you if:

- You're a student registered at a post-secondary institution
- You have a job offer for a work placement or internship in Canada
- You need to do this work placement or internship to complete your studies
- You'll work for the same employer in the same location during your stay in Canada

Employment and labor law standards apply to all foreign nationals in Canada. It is up to the IEC candidates and their Canadian employer to inquire, for their particular case, with the relevant provincial or territorial departments regarding labor standards.
